9. Brief background, History (antecedents), ~200 words

In 2012, the OVPAA commissioned National Institute of Physics professor Dr. Armando Somintac and his graduate student Crispulo Larraga to develop OVPAA's first ever website, intended mainly as a portal for disseminating information and resources on the International Publication Award (IPA). Shortly after it was published, a group of hackers from China broke into the UP web server and defaced the UP System websites. As the attacked UP sites could no longer be recovered, OVPAA staff member Jeanette Burlat created a temporary website using a free Wordpress template. This temporary site, much like its predecessor, housed mostly IPA data.

In 2014, a new website was built by Junell Mendoza of the Center of Investigative and Development Studies under the direction of Associate Professor Maria Mangahas, who had joined OVPAA as a program development associate. Content became more varied as news articles and event announcements from other sites were reposted, and facts and figures on other OVPAA programs were publicized.

When content creation and overall management was handed over to OVPAA staff member Alice Morta in December 2014, the website saw further improvements in both form and function. Site design and navigation were enhanced by graphics, widgets and submenus. New pages were added for literary and creative contributions from the faculty, and for the selected works of the Vice President for Academic Affairs, to name a few. The website's memory limit was substantially increased, which allowed the office to make available online more resources such as progressive teaching and learning videos, and digital copies of handbooks and primers. Scientific publications were also given their own space. Accomplishments in the major OVPAA-administered programs, grants and awards were posted. It must be said that the website's biggest improvement was the creation and publication of original content, which up until 2014 was made difficult by the absence of a dedicated staff member. To this day, almost all news articles and feature stories that appear on the site are prepared in-house by the staff-in-charge.
