9. Brief background, History (antecedents), ~200 words

The UP Think Paper has its roots in the articles of Vice President Gisela Concepcion that stress the positive correlation between investments in higher education and economic growth, as well as in a paper she co-wrote with Professor Emeritus Ernesto Pernia and Professor Ramon Clarete of the UP School of Economics. The latter, titled “The Role of Science and Technology in Economic Development,” argued for the need to ramp up government spending in science, engineering, and research and development – considered crucial in inclusive and long-term growth – and correspondingly, to scale up the UP budget to enable the national university to strengthen and lead the country’s knowledge base. In August 2015, President Alfredo Pascual and Vice President Concepcion convened a consultation meeting with some UP specialists from development-related sectors, such as agriculture and information technology, to collect insights for a blueprint that was in the works. Intended to be circulated among the legislative and executive branches as well as those who ran for president in the 2016 national elections, the plan offered some strategies for developing the country’s suprastructure or human knowledge capital. The first drafts were prepared by the Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs, in cooperation with researchers from the Center for Integrative and Development Studies, between January and February 2016. They were then sent to Prof. Pernia for comments and to Prof. Butch Dalisay for editing. The final version, produced and released by the Office of the President, was picked up by at least three local media outfits, and was made the subject of a roundtable discussion with media at the first UP Knowledge Festival in April 2016. Each of the five presidential candidates likewise received a copy of the paper before the Cebu leg of the COMELEC-sponsored presidential debates. It was published in the June issue of the International Journal of

The page features a navigation bar with 'About' and 'Guide' links, and a search bar. The main content area is titled 'International Journal of Philippine Science and Technology (formerly Philippine Science Letters)'. A 'WHITE PAPER' section highlights the article 'Knowledge-Based Development and Governance: Challenges and Recommendations to the Duterte Administration, 2016-2022' by the University of the Philippines. The authors listed are Alfredo E. Pascual, Gisela Padilla-Concepcion, Ernesto M. Pernia, Jose Y. Dailsay, Edna E.A. Co, Alice Ross T. Morta, Jeanena Mae E. Rafer, and Lea Marie F. Diño. The article is published by the UP Office of the President and the UP Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs. A diagram on the left side of the article shows a flow from 'INVESTMENTS' to 'EDUCATION' and then to 'ECONOMIC GROWTH'. The introduction discusses the challenges of inequality and poverty in the Philippines. The right sidebar contains 'Announcements' regarding USAID STRIDE grants and a social media widget for PhilSciTech.
